When you have: const char *chars = "abcd"; std::string s(chars); The s string isn't initialized with all values set. You have to cast before assigning a value: std::string s(chars); s = "xyz"; This works: std::string s(static_cast(chars)); s = "xyz"; Is there any reason for this? A: The static type of chars is const char * which is a pointer, but std::string::value_type is std::string::pointer. The conversion to pointer is so needed that the

When I publish it, I get the following error message: The publish profile or project configuration was not read from the project because the project file could not be opened. We followed these instructions, but they have not solved the problem. I tried restarting VS and restarting the Web Server, but nothing has solved the problem. A: Go to Solution Explorer->Right Click->Unload and reload the project again, it solved this problem for me. A: I uninstalled ASP.NET Web Tools 2012, installed Web Deploy 2012 and it's worked. A: After a few minutes of searching I figured it out. I just needed to find the file Properties->PublishProfiles and delete the PublishEnabled property. [REDACTED] 82138339de
