Are there any websites or books which would help me to improve my understanding of python? How to use it in a professional environment? A: Python Quickly For the quick reference, Python Quickly is a great little book. It is pretty shallow, but it should cover enough basics to get you started. Python for Google App Engine The Google App Engine tutorial is also very helpful, but it assumes a bit more background than Python Quickly does. As a bonus, it also includes a good introduction to Django, another python web framework. Fabrication of a Stable Thin-Crust Curd and its Application for the Preservation of Raw Cucumbers. I have an array $results in my Model that is fetched via the find() function. I'm trying to display this on my homepage as follows, but using pagination and not the paginate function. Paginator->prev('« Previous', array(), null, array('class' => 'pagination'));?> Paginator->numbers();?>

Paginator->next('»', array(), null, array('class' => 'pagination'));?> This returns a previous and next link, as well as the number of records found. However, it returns no results found. It's as if Paginator is failing to set $results to the contents of the function. I have also tried using the PaginatorHelper class as follows: $paginator = new PaginatorHelper(); $data = $paginator->getData(); echo $this->Paginator->prev('« Previous', array(), null, array('class' => 'pagination')); echo $this->Paginator->numbers(); echo $this->Paginator->next('»', array(), null, array('class' => 'pagination')); Paginator->prev('« Previous', array(), null, array('class' => 'pagination'));?> Paginator->numbers();?> Paginator->next('»', array(), null, array('class' => 'pagination'));?> This time there are no links but the record count does work. However, once again it returns 0 records. I have also tried passing the results via the model and returning it directly in a view

I'm offering any wanted kitlegí isntead. I've also added a Powerpack and a cab reefer for it. Are you interested? I think it would be cool to have some cpnhound(S) to work for you. I'd never really ask a "trades" idea before, but I'd do so for this project if you're interested. Anyway, how do you feel about buying the K3a 2-8-2 from the module? I have the truck and cab as they came from the car shed. Originally the 8-cab modules were considered the nerd ultimate. I have several K3a modules and the Blaupunkt equipment originally came with them, but the later models were upgraded to SD-1s, SD-2s, and SD-3s. There are numerous battery packs at 12v and 24v. Some of the batteries were totaled by the wind breaking away from the track, and I have never bothered to grab the old one. It's really a simple kit to assemble, but I've never been one to just do things like that. From the beginning I wanted to create a faithful trip to what I've seen in catalogues and literature. As we know, I prefer the K3a to the K3 anyway.

It is my belief that having the K3a is not the way the class should have gone. As unpopular as I am being by saying this, having the better actual cab being in the K3 class would be the way that would probably have been the best for everybody. Kind of like the T1-12's and T1-14's would have been. I like the K3a and this is the way for me to complete the happy-cab. I'm listening to them talking on TTD Radio and ultimately I am opting to only have the best ones to work for me. There are a few elements of the train that I would like to change to where it would be different to others. Since I have been working for DMU for 30+ years, I am familiar with long high rounded wagons and I think using them would fit nicely with the newly renovated K3a W-8 bodies. I've learned so many 30+ years of track rebuilds that the idea of this sort of conversion appeals to me. I think it would look great, and look like something many other railfans would appreciate. It would help to bring the K3b

Zombicide is a cooperative game for 1 to 6 players in which each player represents a survivor. In his or her hunt for limited resources and to save his or her fellow survivors, the players must work together. Either you act as a hunter, or you become a prey for the ravenous hordes of undead, and you will be forced to make difficult choices. Each game is between 60 and 90 minutes. The recommended starting players are 5 to 6, so players can expect a long and fun game. This game requires 2 to 6 players in teams of two to six players, and one host. It is designed to be played with less than 6 players, but this is difficult to achieve. You need many teams of two players to play this game, you can only work with 6 players at a time, but with this setting you will find a lot of zombies. Gameplay In Zombicide, a team of survivors engage in a battle with zombies in a small town. While survivors hunt for limited resources, the zombies keep growing in numbers and almost all players must work together to be able to win. Zombies are represented with the open-minded and agile runners, which can move around the board in two opposing directions and are most effective against survivors. They are the only living creatures able to move between two spaces on a single round. If a runner is in contact with a survivor when the first turn ends, she is won by him. If they cannot do so, the survivors are taken by zombies. This may happen more often than you expect! Depending on the difficulty setting, the number of encounters a team must be able to win. To do so, they are faced with increasing risk of game loss and need to provide an answer to the "hunt for food" and "danger" cards before the last turn ends. At the beginning, you only get one manual, a deck of six cards, a set of rulers, and a board. Everything else must be found or purchased. The main rulebook will be added to your manual on the first day. The zombies also have limited movement capabilities, so they can only be influenced by the survivor or hunter that is closest to them. If they go where you did not set an "at-risk area," they cannot harm you. How to play Zombicide The purpose of Zombicide is to provide a game that offers the players a lot of cooperative fun, and ensures that the game flows without delays
