create a decorator that can be used to automatically call a function (instead of a def) when a lambda is used to lambda it. Is that possible? All examples i found on internet works with def instead of lambda. A: It's not possible. When you define a function, you define it with a name, a definition and no arguments. You cannot define a function with arguments when you use a lambda - you should define a named function in that case. You could try to monkey patch a function with a lambda after it was defined, but it would be a pretty ugly hack. ---------- -Translated by: Artemis PRODUCT LINKS ---------- ---------- ---------- ---------- ---------- ---------- WE DON'T TRADE OR SPAM - WE LEAVE FEES ON OUR BLOGS ---------- (Ya know...what's the point of text mining if you don't have a basic understanding of Game Aesthetics) Video Game Recommendations The new sci-fi adventure game, Valkyrie Profile, hit store shelves for PS3 on August 7th. It's nearly two years late, but finally the sequel to the cult-classic Persona series is finally out there. It's been awhile since we had a worthwhile new RPG, but I recently played through about an hour of the game and it's actually pretty good. The game takes place on the planet of New Bodhum and you're a detective named Valkyria. So you go around saving the planet and basically thwarting the plans of your nemesis Kuroda. There's a wide range of explorable locations and characters, but your main objective in the game is to find out who killed the king (Wait a second, where are all the Gameover movies?). If you've never played a Persona game, Valkyrie Profile is a good place to start. It's cheap and relatively easy to play, but there are plenty of references and easter eggs to pull you into the game. You can also pick up the soundtrack (On my computer anyways, I just stole it from my PS3). The soundtrack is actually quite good. If you want to buy the game on PS3: [link to shop.playstation.com] Check out the PS3 blog [link to blog.playstation.com] For more of our PS3 blog articles: [link to blog.playstation.com] ---------- #N bff6bb2d33

The Monmouth University poll released this week found that a majority of GOP voters believe Congress is "too liberal" and about the same amount think it is about right. The results come amid a series of GOP-led votes this year that have inspired grassroots conservatives and tea party voters — from the shutdown to the passage of two disastrous and unpopular budgets. Ms. Pelosi, who praised the new poll by calling it an "ideological gerrymander by Republicans," cited the same votes in a news conference on Wednesday. "Our Republican colleagues know it's an election-year stunt," she said. Early measurements of serum prekallikrein suggest a role in normal hemostasis. Human prekallikrein (PKK) is a glycoprotein released by the liver which can catalyze the activation of high molecular weight kininogens (HK) to prekallikrein (PK) and the activation of factor XII. Since the partial transfer of activity of human PK to active recombinant chicken PKK (tPKK) in an immunoabsorbant system demonstrated that PKK is identical to HK, these results suggest that PKK is involved in physiologic coagulation. The aim of the present study was to determine if PKK is present in the circulating blood of individuals who are not known to have coagulation disorders. Serum samples were obtained from normal individuals and PKK was measured in the samples by zymography, an assay which demonstrates the activation of PKK by HK. PKK activity was demonstrated in 68% of the samples, which had been allowed to coagulate prior to collection. This activity was not present in the samples collected in citrate or heparin anticoagulant. In addition, PKK was not detected in samples collected in citrate
