I'm using the following code: `$date = new DateTime(); $date->modify('-1 day'); $s = $date->format('d/m/Y h:s');` to insert the value of today's date into the XML file (I'm using XSLT) but I'm getting this error message: "Object of class DateTime could not be converted to string". I'm a complete beginner in PHP and I searched for a similar problem but I couldn't find anything. A: This is the correct syntax: `$date = new DateTime(); echo $date->format('d/m/Y h:s');` The problem is your echo. You didn't put $ in front of the second echo. You would also need to add the \ after the h:s to format the echo as a string rather than a time. The SitePoint Forums have moved. You can now find them here. This forum is now closed to new posts, but you can browse existing content. You can find out more information about the move and how to open a new account (if necessary) here.

This winter, I have worked like a dog to post the first edition of the print-on-demand Travel Edition of our online newspapers on demand. I am paid a subcontractor that I contract to work for. He does all the work, and you should actually not be paying me. This is a great way for me to travel, make money, and not take a lot of breaks. Anyway, I have done this from China to the United States in a few trips in 2010, and then moved to Mexico to make additions. New editions will be posted like so; on-demand, as frequently as possible. I will be putting out new editions at any time of the day, almost as often as the first edition is printed. My concept of on demand means, basically unlimited timelines, and considerable redundancy, meaning that my online newspapers will appear in more than one location at any given time. I will not limit my on demand services to print and drop off in hardcopy, but will also make available that way in the future. In the meantime, I continue to grow and evolve the online edition into something unprecedented, with content from several news agencies, and a community of “Digital-first journalists” who add original content. For those of you that haven’t seen them, you can access the new editions here: WEB GUIDE 2008 - TRANSITES Inc., established in 1926 in Vienna, Austria, is the leading manufacturer of folding turnstiles and low-cost high security equipment for the ticketing industry.
