In a demo shown at E3, the team passed the ball, fed it through defenses, took shots, changed players on the fly and were able to knock the ball down. I can't say I felt that I was actually playing a FIFA game instead of watching something, though the game looks and runs quite well. It seems unlikely that the entire game will feel like this, but the demo showed the complete scope of the data and AI that will be used to power the game. The technology, known as "We Work With FIFA," is already in use in real-life football matches and will be used to not only power the game, but to show a multitude of player actions, and even the off-the-ball movement of players. "By capturing player data from live matches in a motion capture suit we can build unprecedented power into FIFA," said Matt Bilbey, CEO of EA Sports. "We're using all of it to create exciting new soccer interactions that we couldn't have dreamed of before." Everything from the very smallest of touches to extreme tackles is being captured and used to create gameplay mechanics. Whether a player is being fouled into the back of the net or just a free kick without the opposition player even touching the ball, the technology will feel right. The methods used for data capture are expected to be open-sourced, allowing developers to use the data, and even create their own demos for FIFA 22. "The question you may ask is how does it feel? The answer is, it feels incredibly natural," said Henry Francis, CTO of EA Sports. "The player is transformed into a computer, that's going to move with real freedom and authenticity. He'll feel like you're controlling him in the game." "In the demo, the player was able to drift away from the player to the side of the penalty box while making sure he maintained momentum towards the centre circle to set up a cross. " —Matt Bilbey, CEO, EA SPORTS The real problem with this type of technology is the massive amount of data that it takes to pull off. FIFA 22 will use motion capture for all players and the ball, be they attackers, midfielders or defenders. It's a task that is next to impossible to achieve without some sort of help. "We need to capture the entire

Features Key:

- Variety of gameplay modes, such as 'FIFA Ultimate Team' have become more varied and immersive than ever. Varied gameplay is now driven by the evolution of 'FIFA Ultimate Team', which combines elements of FIFA and 'FUT', bringing more variety and innovation to the world of online FIFA. 'FIFA® Ultimate Team' is primarily available within FIFA Ultimate Team, but also accessible on other FIFA games.
- Personalised team management, sharing and voting in "MyClub."
- Career mode - Users will enter into career mode as new managers in the game. They will progress through the lower divisions to enter an UEFA Champions League or Europa league group. From there, teams will progress to play in Europe's top 5 leagues, and perhaps eventually, to challenge for the Champions League. Also included in the game is a new FIFA Club World Cup, where users can play out their dreams of captaining a European or African side to a trophy.
- FIFA Ultimate Team - The game is surrounded by two different and complementary modes, 'FIFA Ultimate Team' and 'MyClub'. 'FIFA Ultimate Team' is the most popular game mode in FIFA, where users buy, sell, and trade players within their squad and construct a team using the unique FUT Draft and FUT Transfer market. 'MyClub' allows users to manage their own personal FIFA team from the manager's perspective. 'MyClub' also gives players more ways to improve their team than ever before, such as via skill specific challenges and the new 'Train the Trainer' game mode.
- FIFA 24 - Online match functionality supports up to 100 players both on console and the latest generation of headsets, with integrated split-screen functionality supporting up to four players per console. Players are connected through a unified online gaming and social media world - the more popular FIFA players are, the more rewarding it is for competitive FIFA players to also be popular. Connected to this is a new multi-level, state-of-the-art look at player movements and kits, to drive a rich-and-futuristic feel to the game.
