Synopsis Foal, a kitsch cat from an outlying area of Shropshire, has just slipped into the household of the wealthy purrfect Katherine. She's hoping to acquire a mate with the money from her late husband's inheritance. Foal's ad for a mate has led to an onslaught of rival suitors, including a dapper chorus line of Broadway chorus boys. Foal wants to stay out of this.

Katherine, who has cats of her own back home, cannot resist the siren song of "I Wanna Love You," which is turned up to 11. Foal has been his own drummer all his life, and his parents died in an accident when he was a kitten. He runs away to join an animal circus and learn the ways of the cat like Madeline. He eventually ends up living in a garbage dump, and begins to consider settling down with former friend Timon, who is now a were-monkey. The love he feels for Katherine is thwarted by male cats with their own ideas, however, and by the abundance of catnip on a thespian's dressing room wall, which tempts him to imagine he is a Broadway star.
