Quantitative Assessment of Reducing Viscosity of Intraocular Lens Materials by Injection of Solutions in Altering Compositions. To assess the ability of injecting solutions in a range of their own compositions to reduce the viscosity of aqueous solutions used as intraocular lenses (IOLs). The viscosity of poly(methyl methacrylate) (PMMA) solutions was measured 1 week after the injection. Also, an index indicating the ability to reduce viscosity was defined for solutions determined to give lower viscosity. The ability of solutions containing common electrolytes and the IOL components with different molecular weights to reduce the PMMA viscosity was examined. The index was suitable for evaluating the reducing ability of IOL-related solutions and the effect of altering compositions in the reducing ability. This index may provide an objective way to evaluate the effectiveness of reducing compositions for the development of IOLs.Q: Telerik RadGridView: How to display records of a particular ID I have a RadGridView which is created dynamically.
