fixed orthodontic therapy, a U-shaped (elongated) fixed appliance has been described as a staple appliance. The U-shaped appliance was first introduced in the 1920s by the orthodontist, A. Georg Deprez in Germany, and has been documented to produce a predictable and stable result in treatment. The design incorporates two continuous arches with the midpoint attached to a band around the upper arch wires. Other design variations include a two-arch, four-arch, and arch plus band design. The U-shaped design prevents movement of the upper arch during function and causes the lower arch to be stabilized in a "drop" position (a lateral shift in the molars along their long axis). The arch-plus-band design incorporates a narrow band (archwire-free section) to correct vertical discrepancy and anterior crossbite. The design is often used on the lower arch because the upper arch is often already constricted. A U-shaped appliance is often combined with a miniature closed coil spring or a wire-thin coil spring (wire-thin wire + spring-alone archwire design, the archwire-alone design) to correct various deficiencies such as insufficient space, improper anterior guidance, or both.
