Pixel Shiperoids is a twin-stick shooter inspired by classic arcade games. Your ship and enemies move in a small 2D space in the current Game State at full speed. The ship is destroyed if you damage the hull or forgo a barrel roll. Additionally, the ship takes damage if it collides with enemies. The space between the ship and the enemies is known as the Layer, which for the moment, only allows two obstacles (enemies). The enemies and the player are both moving at full speed and are both represented by blips. If the player is successful in aligning and hitting the enemies, the blips will explode in a shower of color.

Game "Pixel Shiperoids" Gameplay: Two ships fight for survival in a space shooter inspired by 80's arcade classics! Pixel Shiperoids takes the twin-stick shooter genre and injects it with some bullet hell flavor. Your goal is simple: survive and grab the flag!

Game "Pixel Shiperoids" Gameplay: This is a 2D minimalistic twin-stick space shooting game in which you fly a ship to the other end of the level. There are a number of enemies and hazards in the way, including proximity mines, crashdumps, and rock showers. Your ship can go through walls. Your main weapons are a single laser that can shoot through almost anything and a double laser that shoots along a straight line and will go through the first obstacle on its way. Additionally, your ship has a turret that fires in a straight line as well.

Game "Zee Battle" Gameplay: In Zee Battle you control a high-tech ship within an endless asteroid field in a space shooter in which your goal is to destroy your enemies. Your ship is equipped with a large defense shield and a powerful laser that you fire continuously. Enemies fly by to destroy you as quickly as possible. The levels are procedurally generated and will change each time you play.

(Ashford & Sims) Fukuoka Japan (JIC Q-Man) May 2001(Recommendation: YES) British rumour indicates that japan has 1/3 ous technology developing anti aircraft missiles and missiles which need a satellite to be connected to the weapon. Additionally a 3rd party needs to finish the builds for japan. Our Sensor & Targeting nodes are based on US designs but the weapons them selves were almost completely developed in Japan. We had japanese pilots and very little technology to go with it, our radar, communications, remote sensing and weapon design are all based entirely on what the US already had. The Joint Electronics Countermeasure programme should be continued. I have the concern over oversight of Japan's production facilities and a lack of manufacturing capability, particularly given the delay in maintenance delays with the CTOL. In any event we should be looking at other countires with a growth mindset in the nuclear sector e.g. China (the NEST Weapon system is part of the DF program so it could be used also). Freeman: Between peace and war May, 2001(Recommendation: YES) China's Nuclear Potential x Command Strategic Forces Aiding Nuclear Programs (JICI N: The full title of this memo is the Strategic Forces Aiding Nuclear Programs, study prepared for the Department of Defence)) The following identifies a number of factors which affect the likelihood of and timing of the development of Chinese atomic weapons. China's nuclear potential is not something which can currently be classified openly. As only the KEDO agreement excludes SPA use in the future, one has to assume that China would operate in the same way. The acknowledgement of the importance of SPA has generally been defensive in the sense that it is used to emphasise that the US would not gain any advantage by provoking China. What is the nature of the Chinese nuclear potential? There are two separate areas which need to be considered: China's production of nuclear materials, the Areva-built 400 MWe heavy water reprocessing plant at Qinshan and related plants in Sanmen and Dujiazhuang; and, China's secret nuclear power generation programme, codenamed Gong, based upon work done at the Electrical Engineering Institute, Beijing University and Chinese Academy of Engineering. To answer the question of what China'
