I think that as long as one has a sufficiently good and unique ID number, they have access to this script and can do whatever they want with it. It doesn't matter where you are, it just has to be unique and protected by an htaccess rule. See here for more information on using the httpasswd program in this way. As far as I am aware, this is the first example of script running with CGI. Q: Are There Any Security Risks For Using Empty Objects In Angular I just asked this question on Reddit, but I'm gonna try and explain a little more, as I don't think I quite understood the answers. I'm working with a legacy code base, and I'm working on updating a specific method. I have a hard object that I need to break apart, so here's what I did: // on the first line I break my hard object out, and save the result to an object // then I change that object to an empty object, and use it as a placeholder, // but I never assign a value to the empty object Object hard = new Object(); hard.a = "1234"; hard.b = "5678"; Object hard = new Object(); //hard.a = "1234"; //hard.b = "5678"; Object hard = new Object(); //hard.a = "1234"; //hard.b = "5678"; Object hard = new Object(); //hard.a = "1234"; //hard.b = "5678"; Now if I try to access one of those Objects, nothing happens, but if I change it: Object hard = new Object(); //hard.a = "1234"; //hard.b = "5678"; Object hard = new Object(); //hard.a = "1234"; //hard.b = "5678"; Object hard = new Object(); //hard.a = "1234"; //hard.b = "5678"; Object hard = new Object(); //hard.a = "1234"; //hard.b = "5678";

"5678"; Only then does the object behave as expected. What is going on here? Why is the first case the same as the last, and what kind of security risks are there?
