Welcome to Moreytown is a text-based adventure where you grow and feed your way to the top. Play as one of thirteen different species, take over the streets, and take down the gangs who rule them. You can build up a healthy neighborhood, form your own cult or gang, or just take over the town and be the top dog. A major difference between this story and other furry interactive stories is that you will be choosing your actions and changing your choices at any time during the story. You will experience a live action simulation, choosing actions that will affect the story, and the lives of the people around you. You may choose to live in this dangerous neighborhood, or you may choose to see it blown to bits by an unexplained explosion. You may choose to ally yourself with a gang, or you may choose to work with the local police. The story is text-based, and it's up to you to make the decisions that will determine the fate of everyone in your neighborhood. 40743214 Puzzle Highlights Take over the streets Build a gang Add anime cuteness to your furballs! Yolo Space Hacker - Mission Forensic

A story-driven strategy game about a family of space pirates. Novella that will be continued with additional free updates. Being the sole survivor of a pirate shipwreck, you become stranded on a mysterious, Guild Wars 2 Enhancements - Game Patch 1.5.0Reworked the elemental damage system to give every weapon and spell a unique feel. Added a few new important balance changes.New spells: Elemental Wave, Flaming Rush, Barrier, Elemental Vortex, and Barrier I am writing to ensure that the Congressional Budget Office accurately understands the cost and effect of the House Republican budget. CBO's analysis of this budget makes clear that this bill will produce devastating cuts in Medicare, Medicaid and other vital programs that are central to our economy and our communities. As you know, most seniors and people with disabilities need Medicare to pay for their health care. Medicaid provides health care for more than 70 million low-income Americans. As President Obama said, "If you or a member of your family needs medical care, we can count on Medicaid to be there, as it is in 50 states and the District of Columbia." The Affordable Care Act established a new insurance market called the Health Insurance Exchange. The Republican budget would repeal and defund the ACA and repeal Medicaid expansion. Medicaid expansion, however, would be permitted to continue for several years under current law, and the government would cover a larger share of the expansion population through 2016. After 2016, all new beneficiaries would no longer receive federal funds for their health care. It is important to note that CBO's analysis does not yet fully incorporate the effects of provisions in the House Republican budget that provide a fiscal correction to the costs of the Medicare Hospital Insurance Trust Fund (MHTF), and it does not include effects from Medicare savings and other factors that would otherwise reduce the rate of cost growth in the agency's budget. For example, the House Republican budget would raise the eligibility age for Medicare by four years, and this would reduce the growth of Medicare spending and the number of people covered by the program. The House Republican budget would also significantly reduce Medicare payments to providers of health care services and would affect other programs in the agency's budget. I hope that these changes would be addressed by the Congressional Budget Office in its analysis. Given the magnitude of these cuts, it is reasonable to expect that the Congressional Budget Office will conclude that the reduction in total spending will be about $473 billion over the next decade

Scenario, Part 1 In the early winter of 2018, the US Department of Defense's Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) released a notice saying their open call for space systems had been cancelled, and in so doing effectively killed off the US's existing efforts for autonomous spacecraft. Their goal of sending a satellite into orbit and turning it into a spy platform had been deemed unfeasible, and their goal for enhancing warfare and battlefield decision-making in addition to satellite observation had been left unfulfilled. DARPA had already spent $320 million on the effort and one that had directly implicated the possibility that the countries under development had strong theoretical or scientific backup to their ideas. It was also less than a year since the DARPA Reboot initiative had been conceived, with its stated goal of giving millennials safe and sane time off from the threats of modern warfare. This unexpected announcement had international implications beyond the original scope of American robotics research: if DARPA's robots had been given inadequate support, the very notion of autonomous spacecraft could have been under threat of dissolution. Thus, it was a debacle for the United States. While this played out in real-time, many private organizations got in on the act. Google, Microsoft, and several independent developers and small enterprises had companies or projects incorporating what had been difficult state-of-the-art robotics engineering and space hardware. Stanford, MIT, UC Berkeley, Purdue, the Naval Postgraduate School, and Georgia Tech played their part as well. Together, these groups produced the majority of the software systems and interfaces that worked alongside DARPA's four-and-a-half-year-old space robots, about two thirds of which had been recalled. What would have become of all this if DARPA had cancelled an announcement that was only a few months away from being revealed? DARPA got a fast track on autonomous spacecraft largely due to its high-profile successes in making robots capable of remote operation in hostile environments. It's hard to overstate DARPA's dominance in this field. Aside from small successes such as 'Flame' and 'Ranger,' DARPA has usually been the driving force behind any major mass-produced robot, which has helped teams such as Google's military division purchase their expertise on Kapture, Google's enterprise-focused video analysis system. Though this has paid off with far more talent being attracted to Google than to the DoD, there is still the argument that DARPA shouldn't have the monopoly on the products it produces.
