Far Cry 3 (Star.Distinctive patterns of single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) in the conserved region and non-conserved region of the human thromboxane A2 receptor gene. The thromboxane A2 receptor (TP) is an essential regulator of platelet function. It has been shown that the human TP gene locus is highly variable, with at least four independent DNA duplications in the evolution of humans. We have found that the human TP gene contains 27 polymorphic sites, including 19 SNPs and 8 insertions/deletions (indels). Among the 19 SNPs, 10 were also found in 10-12 additional individuals from the Han Chinese population. Seven of the 19 polymorphisms affect amino acid residues: two were synonymous SNPs (codons C50T and C189A), two were non-synonymous SNPs (codons 567C/A and 690C/T), and three were indels (insertions of 57, 79 and 83 bp). None of the 7 amino acid change positions was found to be located in the 7 transmembrane domains (7-TM) or cytoplasmic regulatory regions of the TP receptor. We also examined the organization of the exon-intron structures of the human TP gene and found that the exon-intron organization of the TP gene was quite different from that of other genes. Three regions, A, B and D, were identified by the 3' end, intronic sequences and positions of the 7-TM, respectively, and each contained highly conserved regions. The most prominent characteristic of the regions was that these regions were conserved in the TP gene and all of the variants in these regions produced identical hybrid oligonucleotides on
