To evaluate the effect of anterior chamber inflammation in myopia by ultrasonography biomicroscopy (UBM). We studied 20 eyes of 13 patients, including 10 primary myopic ones and 10 (control group) without myopia. In the patients group, we studied the difference of refractive error and the UBM findings in a laser flare cell meter (LFCM) before and after treatment. The LFCM result was negatively correlated with the refractive error. The UBM findings in the patients group were statistically significantly greater than those in the control group. UBM could be used as an effective method to evaluate the anterior chamber inflammation.Start Date: 4/22/01; HourAhead hour: 14; No ancillary schedules awarded. Variances detected.
