You'll take on the role of a new Mutant Football League player who dreams of bringing home Mayhem Bowl glory. This game is designed for a digital platform, but you can also play online with others. You can even modify the game files to use them with other games. Download About This Game Alien Invasion March The west is the best - well it was until the big one hit and left behind a burning city in ruins.

Thankfully, the stadium survived, and two new west coast teams have risen out of the ashes to battle for Mayhem Bowl supremacy. This pack also includes a brand new mutant human species who is ready to unleash his fury on the league. This pack includes: Mutant Human Species #2 - This new mutant character is evenly balanced in most skill categories and can't wait to hit the gridiron to show his stuff. Los Scandalous Damned Team - This team has an explosive, high powered offense and are taking the league by storm. Their Quarterback, Jared Goth passes with demonic precision to the best receiving tandem in the league. Los Scandalous Volts Team - Led by All-Star veteran Bloody Livers, a smart, gutsy Quarterback who's not afraid to throw the long ball or bash his skull against any defense. While their offense gets most of the acclaim their defense is stout and can bloody up any offense in the league. Los Scandalous Shake & Bake Arena - Both teams share the same arena with different hazards. The stadium managed to survive the big one but is littered with cracks, crevice's and other nasty obstacles. Alien Invasion March is the first standalone expansion pack for the Mutant Football League. This 8-player expansion pack adds an underground alien base on the west coast. Aliens have invaded the west coast and have taken over the Banshee Base. The Banshee Base now serves as a resistance HQ for the Mutant Nation. Missile The Surface to Air Missile (SAMS), also known as the Surface to Air Rocket or as the SAM once it reached the production stage, was a long-range surface-to-air missile which entered service in 1962 and remained a principal part of the force structure until 1993. The SAM saw a succession of design changes (all of them major) from the time it was first presented to the defence staff in the mid-1940s through the early 1950s. The resulting variants in the SAM can be divided into three major generations: the standard system, the early missile warning (EMW) system, and the latest combat system. The standard SAM was replaced by the improved EMD system beginning with the introduction of the YSAM in 1968. Although the SAM remained in service until 1993, most of the modifications and improvements were made in system 4, which also took the name Yuichirō Hagane (Japanese "Blue Arrow"), and which entered service in 1970. This was followed by a major redesign in System 5, which entered service in 1978 and ended the SAM service. The missiles in Systems 5 and 6 were the most numerous and most numerous in the world. Design Initial concept (1940-1964) During World War II, the Imperial Japanese Navy (IJN) considered air defence for land forces as a possibility, but it experienced problems in test range selection and range to effective engagement ratio. The first official scheme for a coastal defence missile was proposed in February 1940. The general introduction of new weapons, known as the Yasutomi-Henri-Tanaka plan called for the force to be reorganized by the given date, but also predicted that by September 1943 nearly three-fourths of the IJN's weapon systems were to be in operation. This plan was heavily influenced by the French naval air defence for coastal use, the Henschel Hs 293. The Imperial Japanese Navy supplied a short exchange of notes with the German Luftwaffe over this weapon in 1942. However, the responses were guarded. The Imperial Japanese Navy claimed in January 1943 that Army engineers proposed using a pair of in a rocket launching system for the new naval air defence weapon, stating that it was powerful enough to destroy medium bombers and twenty cruisers. There was also the claim that this weapon could also be used for anti-aircraft artillery. A system based on this missile was completed in 1944. Civilian aeronautical engineer Shigeji Nagano of

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a communication system, and more particularly, to a transmission/reception apparatus and a transmission/reception method, which is applied to an orthogonal frequency division multiplexing (OFDM) system. 2. Description of the Related Art Recently, research and development relating to the multimedia have increased, and orthogonal frequency division multiplexing (OFDM) system communication as a standard system for transmitting the broadband communication information was adopted in digital TV broadcasting and next generation mobile communication system. The conventional OFDM system is used in mobile communication system with a simplified structure and performed in frequency selective fading environment, so that it can provide efficient communication even in poor channel environment. Further, the OFDM system transmits many subcarriers in parallel with one symbol, and on the time axis of OFDM symbol, many symbols constitute one OFDM channel. In this way, OFDM system has an advantage in that less intersymbol interference is introduced and lower PAPR distortion in next generation mobile communication system because high peak power is not generated for each symbol. Further, OFDM system has an advantage in that OFDM system communication can highly accurately perform spread spectrum communication due to the ability of utilizing the frequency band effectively. OFDM system is expected to become a next generation high speed/large data system. The OFDM system has various subcarriers in parallel with one symbol forming the symbol
