The invention pertains to an arrangement having three functions and two components. The functions are a door mechanism and a latch mechanism. The components are a stationary part and a movable part which are connected via pin members and which are jointly moved by a control member. The control member is connected with the moveable part and the stationary part. The moveable part, however, is connected with the stationary part via a detent and an elastic member. The control member is connected with the elastic member. The details of the arrangement which are known and the features thereof are described in German patent application, Ser. No. 17 00 902. There are arrangements which have three functions, that is, window and door mechanisms are present; there is further a latch mechanism which is present. The control member which jointly moves the components and has associated with it the detent and also an elastic member, which cooperates with this detent, which is also known. Here, the functional assignment of the member has remained the same as in a window and door arrangement of the prior art. In a door mechanism which is usually present in a non-loaded state, the user first has to close the door; in the closed state
