Note: The terms _graphic designer_ and _illustrator_ are often used interchangeably in the same breath to mean a person who creates images. However, an _illustrator_ is a _graphic designer_ who specializes in creating images that are the main point of focus, as opposed to other types of graphic design, such as print design or web design. While Photoshop is a general purpose program that is often used by all _graphic designers_, some specialize in it exclusively. A _graphic designer_ usually uses other design programs as well to create artwork that will be incorporated in a brochure, for example. Photoshop is not a specialty program. A graphic designer is expected to work in Photoshop, Illustrator, and other graphics programs using one or more of them. The term _specialist_ is used in a technical sense when describing Adobe applications, meaning that a specialist does one or more of the following: • Uses only a certain type of application • Uses only certain versions of a certain type of application • Uses only certain levels of user access • Conforms to a certain functional scope • Uses only a certain type of end product A graphic designer can be categorized in one of these ways depending upon the stage of his or her design process. For example, a logo designer may design logos in Photoshop, but he or she may use another type of program for other types of work. Figure 11-1 shows a few examples. Figure 11-1 A graphic designer and illustrator uses Photoshop to create and alter images. The free online version of Photoshop is called Photoshop Express. Tip: The selection of the proper application for a design project can mean the difference between success and failure.
