----- [I Wrote QWER-Chat To Be Free Of Charge And For Running Quickly And Efficiently] [Available On The Play Store] [Back Button = Menu] [To Hangup, you need to press the "Dial" button once.] I think I forgot to mention how to do this on Windows Phone. Hold the phone up to your ear. I made a phone call from QWER-Chat to my land line. I held the phone to my ear. Press the "Dial" button once. A dial tone will sound. I didn't hear it. You don't need to have a land line to make a call from QWER-Chat. But you do need to press the "Dial" button to do that. And if you use QWER-Chat with a radio communication software such as MixRadio or Windows Media Player, there is a problem. That's because the "Dial" button isn't recognized by the mixer software. When you press the "Dial" button, the mixer software receives no signal and stops responding. If that problem is solved, it would be awesome if you make a feature of a technology of a vibrating input. I may think about using the physical state of a phone as a problem if it's possible. This may be a problem. If you have a weird phone where the "Dial" button of a phone doesn't work, try to make the "Dial" button work by following these steps. (1) Press and hold a phone button of the phone. It must be either a phone button of another phone you have. I've tried the power button, but I couldn't make it work. (2) Press and hold the button and the "Dial" button at the same time. (3) After holding and pressing the button and the "Dial" button at the same time for a while, the "Dial" button should be recognized. (4) If the "Dial" button is recognized and answered, the receiver may not be a phone, and it's not a problem. But if the "Dial" button doesn't work, and it's a phone you have, you need to make the phone recognize the "Dial" button by following these steps. (5) Find the phone button on the phone you have. It may be a button located under a physical keyboard. If you find such a button and press and hold it, it can be recognized as a
