From the beginning AutoCAD Product Key was a large leap forward from its predecessors, as it introduced a new method for viewing and creating graphics called "perspective." The most important feature in AutoCAD is its ability to create a "3D" view of a CAD drawing. This in turn makes it possible to "turn" the drawing to show you different sides or sides of the object. The CAD layout is essentially two-dimensional, and using CAD programs is a way of drawing a two-dimensional object on a computer using a system of coordinates. AutoCAD's use of perspective - the ability to view an object from any angle - makes it possible to "view" the object from every direction, and allows 3D objects to be viewed as if they were in the real world. This is done by creating an imaginary "camera" (camera is the term used to refer to the object or plane that the view is showing from), which is able to look at any object in the drawing from any point. When using a camera, you can move around a 3D drawing to look at the object from any direction. While early CAD programs were purely 2D, AutoCAD enabled users to view objects from any angle and from any perspective, at the same time as they were designing them. In other words, you could design the object in two dimensions on a piece of paper and see it in three dimensions using a computer. This was a major breakthrough in CAD and the 3D revolution. AutoCAD's 3D editing technology allows users to view, construct and manipulate solid and surface geometry, build assembly and frame structures, as well as model, animate and view surfaces, solids, and assemblies, both in real time and in batch. Because AutoCAD can make 3D models, it's possible to rotate the model in three dimensions. This can be done in two ways. Perspective can be used to show the part from all sides, and Orthogonal view is used to show the part from only one angle, usually the front, and also to show the part from both sides. The camera can be moved from one viewing position to the next. If the camera is moved to the right, that means the camera is moving towards the right. If the camera is moved up, that means the camera is moving upward. If the camera is moved down, that means the camera is moving downward. The third way to change the angle
