(c)Pregnancy outcome of different groups of patients with systemic lupus erythematosus treated at a single centre. Pregnancy in patients with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) may influence maternal morbidity and mortality. In this study we investigated the management of different groups of pregnancies in women with SLE and assessed fetal outcomes. Fifty-seven pregnancies in 50 SLE patients, treated at a single centre, were studied. Patients were divided into four groups: 1) acute SLE flare during pregnancy (n = 2); 2) previous miscarriages and SLE flare during pregnancy (n = 6); 3) SLE flare before pregnancy and pregnancy follow-up (n = 16); and 4) previous live births and SLE flare during pregnancy (n = 21). Groups were compared with regard to disease manifestations, treatment, laboratory data, and maternal and fetal outcome. The relative risk (RR) was calculated using incidence rates and 95% confidence intervals (95% CI). A total of 110 pregnancies were documented in 50 patients. Three patients gave birth to twins (2.4%). Twenty patients had an SLE flare during pregnancy (RR 0.3, 95% CI 0.2-0.5). A total of 39 patients were treated with intravenous steroids (RR 0.6, 95% CI 0.4-1.0). The number of pregnancies, the incidence of lupus flares, and the SLE flare-related maternal mortality ratio were not different between the group treated with and without intravenous steroids. The incidence of premature rupture of membranes and premature delivery was slightly higher in the group treated with intravenous steroids (RR 1.4, 95% CI 0.9-2.2 and RR 1.4, 95% CI 0.9 c6a93da74d
