But after 15 years of training, she's never been a real contender for a major medal in the sport. Not even on the individual level. That changed in the 2016 Summer Olympics in Rio de Janeiro. Jung, who is of Korean descent, won the bronze medal in the women's 58-kilogram class. It was the first Olympic medal for a Korean athlete since 2004 and the first for a taekwondo athlete at the Games since the sport debuted in 1976. On Monday, Jung, who is 39, posted on Instagram her joy at winning the medal. But she also expressed concern that taekwondo is being marginalized because of the country's tense relationship with North Korea. "I am not a politician," she wrote. "However, I hope that the Olympics do not become politicized by any reason and that the Olympics are not used by any political agenda. I have dedicated my life to the Olympics and I want to continue being a world champion as a result of my efforts." In a phone interview Monday, Jung said that "there is room for the Korean culture in the Olympics, but the Games also provide a chance for the international community to see Korean culture, too." She said she does not agree with those who say that taekwondo, which was invented in Korea, is "a Korean tradition" and "a Korean sport." "We train very hard as taekwondo athletes," she said. "But it's not a Korean sport. It's not a Korean culture. It's an international culture." In an interview with The Associated Press last month, Jung said she was touched when people congratulated her with a "Korean" name. "I am Korean," she said. "Korean is my name, too. But I became an athlete first. The name was my father's name." Jung, who was born in Japan, was just 3 years old when her family moved to South Korea. Her father is from Seoul and her mother is Japanese. Her father, Kim f988f36e3a
