GIMP also needs more RAM and disk space than Photoshop, but you can often clip to layers that have already been created. Plus, many users find GIMP a lot more pleasant with regards to simple usage. The interface of Photoshop is in every way a lot more user-friendly. In fact, the interface is customizable, allowing you to change aspects of the interface on a day-to-day basis. The same cannot be said for GIMP. It's also worth noting about GIMP that it has no Macintosh version; though you can convert your Photoshop files to GIMP, the reverse is not possible.
