These are a series of silent black-and-white photographs that record the lives of ordinary people in Britain at the time. It's a valuable historical resource for documenting the everyday lives of the period. The photo above might be that of a wedding, the one above is a typical snapshot, but the one below shows a woman in her garden. A century and a half ago, those who did not own a camera were literally missing out on this record of their lives. By today's standards, the images are remarkable. Imogen Palm is a group leader at the Twentieth Century Society in London. She tells me that she visited Pompeii when she was 16, and was inspired. In 1994, she and a group of friends started the Pompeii Group, a website devoted to life in the city before it was buried by Mount Vesuvius. Like the Pompeii-Photo Facebook page, Palm's group is an excellent source of historical photos, but they go back much further, as Palm explains: "The Roman, Greek, Celtic, and even the Romans that preceded them all left some evidence of their stay in the region
