Commonly traded these days, the Mitsubishi Alpha is an ideal processor for small automation, as it combines a handful of useful features with an easy to use environment. It can be used in a variety of situations, including air conditioning systems, a water boiler, a smoke detection system, and much more. The Alpha was originally intended for the purpose of controlling the household appliances, but it has found favor with a number of other types of systems as well. The Alpha has an impressive setup, including a simple user interface, which has been developed around a color screen, and uses a simplified set of commands.
