It stars Abhishek Bachchan, Rani Mukerji and THE SELF-ADMINISTRATION OF CHEMOTHERAPY OF LYMPHOCTIC LEUKEMIA IN RURAL AMERICA: SUBJECTIVITY, SELF-CARE AND ANTICIPATORY ATTITUDES. This study examined the decision to self-administer chemotherapy for the management of chronic or recurrent Hodgkin's lymphoma among rural Americans through a community-based participatory research (CBPR) model. One hundred rural participants who had been diagnosed with Hodgkin's lymphoma and self-administered chemotherapy, completed a survey that probed attitudes and self-care behaviors. Healthcare providers or technicians provided support. The most important influences on treatment decision making were self-care behaviors and patient factors such as quality of life and knowledge of risks and benefits. The most important themes related to self-care behaviors were that participants were aware of their treatment plan and the risk of recurrence and side effects of chemotherapy, and believed they were able to self-administer it. Patients' perception of their own competence at chemotherapy administration and lack of support from healthcare professionals were the major factors affecting their choice to self-administer chemotherapy. While provider education increased patients' knowledge of treatment plan and side effects, these factors were still the most influential in treatment decision-making
